Customer Journey Map Template

Touchpoint & Emotion Mapping

Journey maps built from assumptions are decoration. This template forces evidence at each stage and ends with prioritised interventions.

What's inside

- Stage definition by customer behaviour
- Touchpoint and channel inventory
- Emotion and friction plotting
- Evidence requirements per stage
- Intervention prioritisation

Stages

- 01 Name stages from the customer's view, not your internal process
- 02 Define the trigger that moves someone to the next stage
- 03 Note how long each stage typically takes
- 04 Identify where people commonly exit

Evidence

- 01 Support every claim with data or a direct quote
- 02 Interview at least five recent customers per segment
- 03 Use analytics for behaviour, interviews for motivation
- 04 Mark assumptions clearly so they can be tested

Friction

- 01 Record the emotional low point in each stage
- 02 Identify unnecessary steps and waiting periods
- 03 Note where customers must repeat information
- 04 Flag handoffs between teams — friction concentrates there

Act

- 01 Prioritise fixes at the highest-volume drop-off point
- 02 Assign an owner to each intervention
- 03 Set a measurable target per fix
- 04 Re-map after significant product or process change
